Kencove Farm Fence to display solar fencing, other latest products at Ohio Farm Science Review

BLAIRSVILLE, Pa.- Kencove Farm Fence Supplies will join the multitude of agribusinesses looking to show off their latest and greatest offerings at the 2011 Farm Science Review.

While visitors to Kencove's booth 963 on Wool Avenue can expect to find timeless fencing essentials like high-tensile wire, woven-wire, insulators and electric fence chargers, they'll also see innovative products like the company's newly developed Solar Dolly™.

"The Solar Dolly is a handcart on which you can mount all the components for a solar-powered electric fencing system," said Bonita Whalen, a Kencove product specialist. "It's unique because of its portability and because it's an efficient alternative to regular mains-powered electric fence systems."

Additional featured products from Kencove include a new braided electric twine for rotational grazers and a Kiwi hydraulic post driver on display. Several Kencove product specialists will be on hand to answer questions on all aspects of agricultural fencing. Free literature, catalogs and post driver DVDs will also be available for visitors to take home.

"Big gatherings like the Farm Science Review give us the chance to meet so many people and make a lot of friends," Whalen said. "We enjoy sharing what we know about fences and we often learn something in return."

The Farm Science Review runs from September 20 to the 22 at the Molly Caren Agricultural Center near London, Ohio.
